Dear Miss Entenman:

We have received and read with close attention your letter of 12 September.

In regard to the Powers Case, you should take into consideration the fact that he was over a hundred days in solitary confinement without access to family, friends, his own legal advisers, or any U. S. Embassy representative prior to the trial, that undoubtedly the Soviets had drummed into his mind what they wished to come out at the trial, and this can be done and be effective even short of the techniques of "brain washing."

In selecting the pilots for such difficult missions, individuals whose past training and other technical, mental and ideological outlook seemed to qualify them for this job were chosen on the basis of these qualifications and willingness to serve. The pay scale of the pilots is about equivalent to that which a chief pilot on one of our airlines receives today. As you know, Powers had served as an Air Force officer and in no sense can he be considered a soldier of fortune.

As you can appreciate, it would not be appropriate for us to comment on the other two individuals mentioned in your letter as they were employed by another agency.

Sincerely,

SIGNED

Dear Sir:

The shock of the Thomas Powers trial had barely worn off before admission is made that Bernard Mitchell and William Martin have defected to Russia. It hardly seems possible that such events are happening.

Thomas Powers has shown himself to be only interested in his $30,000 a year salary.
It is disclosed that he has never voted and apparently does little interest in the government The question seems to be "Why was this man employed for so important a job?"

Mitchell and Martin have been revealed as under psychiatric treatment. Again the question "Why were these men employed?"

I am deeply concerned for the future of my country.
Something is wrong when we allow people with mental problems or shallow values to be trusted with important national secrets. I would like much more effort to be made in establishing character before a man is employed.

Yours,
